Tanja Janz (Loewe)

author

Tanja Janz is a member of the cassette generation, and as a child she longed to write novels. After burying this dream at the tender age of eleven, she went on to make a career as a teacher. After a while, though, she felt called to write novels again and decided to write down the stories that she had collected inside her head. Her fashion stories are inspired by the Banarama girl band and everything that came out of London at the time. She was never seen without her Levis 501 and Doc Martens.
