CRIME ONLINE

Myriam Bellinger, the star of an only moderately successful internet series called 'Missing', has been kidnapped. The criminals have left no clues. Myriam has no enemies and neither her parents nor her producer have enough money to pay a ransom. The case is being led by Chief Inspector Amelie Fröhlich, who is fumbling in the dark. Then an untraceable video blog appears on the series fan page. It shows Myriam Bellinger, in chains, being mistreated and kept locked up in a plain cell. Day by day, the appalled public can now follow Myriam's sufferings live. She seems to be falling in love with her kidnapper. The internet community is posting increasingly emotional comments, and the number of clicks on 'Missing' shoots up. Especially when the first ransom demands come in: two million Euros, to be raised by crowdfunding! Once again, Gina Mayer has written a gripping psychological thriller about the feelings of a generation that seems to think it is normal even for crimes to go online.
