A derailed, burning train somewhere in the London Underground. Nine boys of different backgrounds just recover consciousness. They don't know each other, and have no similarities except for one information: All of them are part of an evacuation operation called SEED, which aim it is to protect kids and teenagers of European cities from the Third World War.

Soon, they develop doubts: Why is it only nine of them? Why poor and criminals instead of the elite? There's not much time to think about it as the tunnel fills up with smoke from the burning train.
