What happens in Volume 3:

Talin Brand has tracked Edda across the island kingdom. And he has found her. Just before she is about to set off for the Last Islands in her Floating Ship, Brand fatally stabs her with a knife and pushes her into the gray waters of the Sea of Tar. But Edda is a daughter of the Silver Sea, and the creatures of the sea will not allow her to die.

Meanwhile, Edda's childhood friend Teofin seeks out the island of Telomaar, where he plans to study the Old Language. And Pantemin, the man Edda loves, stays on Bal Okren and gets the Nan to build a new floating ship. When Edda finally returns to Bal Okren, nothing can stop her from searching for her brother Tobin on the last islands. And she finds not only Tobin there, but another brother and her own story. But she still has a great task ahead of her. On the high island of Astador, the Swan Throne awaits the new queen. Since Marinne's death, the throne has closed its wings tightly. Will it open them for Edda?
