Story

On the trail of H.G. Wells

It's the 6th June 1895; the New Museum in Berlin is opening its new Ancient Documents permanent exhibition and Kaiser Wilhelm II is visiting Museum Island. Suddenly, shots ring out. The Kaiser collapses, seconds before the murderous bullets strike his consort. The consequences of this cowardly assassination are devastating; the repressive anti-Socialist laws are tightened, military rule is proclaimed, there are strikes, protests, riots – Germany is facing civil war. Suddenly, everyone is reading an article in the Berlin morning paper; the heading states that Carl Friedrich von Humboldt is building a Time Machine. Can he use it to undo the attack on their beloved Kaiser?

After a series of travels in exotic lands, beneath the sea and to the centre of the earth, Thomas Thiemeyer has tackled yet another classic of the fantasy adventure genre; H.G. Wells's Time Machine – and with this new story, he conducts his World-Seeker series to a thrilling, enthralling, and thoroughly surprising finish.
